NATIONAL Westminster and HSBC Holdings, two of the biggest banks in the City of London, today put in place contingency plans to ensure that it was business as usual for their customers despite Saturday's huge bomb blast.

Derek Wanless, NatWest's chief executive, said that although the 52-storey NatWest Tower had suffered extensive damage, with up to a third of its windows shattered by the explosion, 'all our businesses are up and running'.

As the clear-up began, a bank spokesman said that the building was fully insured, but it was not yet possible to assesses the cost of the damage.

NatWest said that key members of the 1300 staff who work at the tower, headquarters for the bank's UK retail business, have been moved to other bank offices in the capital.

Other staff will be contacted within the next 48 hours. There is a staff helpline number: 0800 400 490.

The spokesman said that NatWest's computers and other records were not affected by the blast. Tomorrow's annual shareholders' meeting has been switched from the Tower to Chiswell Street Brewery, at 11am.

HSBC, which includes the Hongkong Bank and the Midland Bank, said that its main computer records are safe following the blast which wrecked its Bishopsgate building housing the bank's trade finance division.

The bank lost 'current working files' going back some months.

The Stock Exchange said all systems appeared to be working but staff had difficulty arriving at work because only

Insurers 'escape' bomb

THE insurance industry will escape relatively unscathed from the weekend City bombings with the Government expected to pick up at least 90% of the estimated £300 million bill.

Leading composites will stand to pay out 'a handful of millions', with Sun Alliance probably the most heavily exposed with expected losses of between £4 and £6 million.

As the market dismissed weekend suggestions that the total bill could rise as high as £1 billion, General Accident shares firmed 1p to 572p. Royal Insurance was up 1p at 327p. Commercial Union eased 1p to 615p. Sun Alliance was 1p lighter at 329p.

It is expected that the large majority of businesses suffering damage will be provided with terrorism cover.

According to the Association of British Insurers: 'While it is much too early to give a reliable figure for the explosion, it seems likely to be of the same order of magnitude as last year's City bomb.

The businesses affected are likely to have carefully worked out contingency plans which should minimise the disruption and keep down business interruption claims.

'There remain a great deal of empty office accommodation in the City which is being made immediately available to the businesses needing to relocate.'

The ABI adds: 'All insurers pass the premiums for terrorism cover in their entirety to a mutual reinsurance company, Pool Re, which meets the cost of claims.

'If the funds of Pool Re are not sufficient to meet all the claims, insurers will themselves pay Pool Re a further 10% of the premiums they collected for Pool Re.'

1 Dead, 40 Hurt As a Blast Rips Central London

By WILLIAM E. SCHMIDT Published: April 25, 1993

A huge bomb hidden in a parked construction truck shattered the heart of London's financial district this morning, killing one man, wounding more than 40 people and raising a cloud of smoke that was visible across much of the capital.

Detectives at Scotland Yard immediately blamed the Irish Republican Army, which set off a similar bomb in nearly the same neighborhood just over a year ago, killing three people and causing $1.25 billion in damage.

The body of the dead man was discovered nearly six hours after the explosion by police searching buildings on Bishopsgate, the busy city thoroughfare on which the truck believed to contain the bomb was parked.

Because it was a weekend morning, only a handful of office workers and building security personnel were in the City of London, as the financial district is officially known. The City is also well-traveled by tourists and tour buses, drawn by its narrow streets and many old churches.

Late tonight, two car bombs exploded in the city, damaging buildings but causing no casualties, officials said.

Witnesses said the force of this morning's explosion, which came after several telephone warnings, sent people crying and screaming through the streets as glass from the windows of banks and skyscrapers rained down over an area of several square blocks. Streets were carpeted with broken shards, and the interiors of some buildings resembled stage sets, the furniture inside exposed to the open.

Most of the windows on the eastern side of the 52-story National Westminister Tower were gone, and window blinds fluttered in the spring wind. The explosion gouged a 15-foot wide crater in the street near the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation building and blew in the building's lobby.

"It's just damage everywhere," said Nigel Tree, working in the bank. "All the doors of the lift shafts have been blown in. There's very little standing apart from the core wall."

One insurance executive said today's damage might exceed losses from the April 10 explosion of last year. Nicholas Balcombe, the chief executive of a London insurance broker, estimated that damage from this bombing would exceed $1.5 billion. Government to Meet Costs

After last year's explosion, many insurance companies refused to cover any further losses resulting from terrorist attacks in the City of London, and the Government moved to create a special fund to help underwrite such losses. While the measure has not yet been passed into law by Parliament, the Government said today that it would help meet costs.

Police this morning cordoned off nearly a square mile of the City of London, while they searched through damaged buildings. Most of those wounded were treated for shock or cuts received as a result of flying glass.

Among the wounded was a policeman who was helping to evacuate the area at the time the bomb detonated, about 10:25 A.M. The first telephoned warning, which carried a prearranged I.R.A. code word to indicate it is not a crank call, was received by the police about an hour earlier.

As a result, the police evacuated worshipers at the city's oldest synagogue, where the blast later blew out three windows, and telephoned building security guards in the area to get them to herd occupants away from windows.

But many had no warning. In the Moorgate Underground station, not far from the blast site, the concussion from the blast caused panic and commotion among passengers on a train that had just arrived in the station. For others, the warnings came too late.

Raymond Fayer, a security guard at the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, was knocked unconscious by the blast, not long after taking a telephone call warning about the bomb. "It all went black and then the next thing I looking up and seeing the ceiling down on me," he said from a London hospital.

HEADLINE: City hopes for 'business as usual' after IRA bomb

BYLINE: By DEAN NELSON and ROBERT COLE

BODY:

THE CITY of London worked throughout last night to avert chaos for its 300,000 office staff this morning. Worst hit will be those with the 35 to 50 companies forced to move premises by the IRA bomb blast on Friday evening in which three people died.

At Staples Corner, in north-west London, the busy traffic junction which was a bomb target later that night, surveyors completed preliminary investigations but the Department of Transport said no decison had been taken on whether the A5 flyover would have to be rebuilt. Traffic was diverted yesterday, causing major disruption, and even if the flyover survives delays will last for a year.

In the City, British Telecom engineers, building contractors and window replacement companies have been working throughout the weekend to get the area ready for its workforce today.

Telecom engineers have repaired cables and redirected switchboard calls to affected companies to their new premises.

The worst damaged among the City's buildings were the Baltic Exchange and the Chamber of Shipping premises, which Ted Harthill, the City of London's surveyor, said last night would probably have to be completely rebuilt.

Baltic Exchange employees have been told they will be based at the Lloyd's building near by.

The Lord Mayor, Sir Brian Jenkins, said the Corporation of London had established helplines for affected businesses to assist them in finding alternative office accommodation. That would not be a problem because of the large number of offices left vacant by the recession, he said.

He added that although British Telecom had arranged for most calls to be redirected, others would be handled by Guildhall which would also act as a clearing house for stranded employees.

Sir Brian attempted to play down the extent to which the City would be affected, saying every attempt had been made to make it "business as usual".

He added that British Rail had offered poster space at stations to relay information to displaced staff.

"The City of London will be ready for work on Monday as usual. That has been our objective since Friday evening. We are confident that all will work well and effectively in the morning.

"There has been a splendid effort by all concerned in the City of London to provide facilities for those businesses affected by this horrific incident," he added.

Among the worst affected companies in the City are Commercial Union, James Capel, Hongkong & Shanghai Bank and the National Westminster Bank. But the Stock Exchange, the Lloyd's of London insurance market and the foreign exchange markets are all hoping to operate as normal.

Ray Morley, marketing services director of Commercial Union, said that 650 of his staff would be affected and about half would not be found office accommodation for some time. He added that about half would be moved to Croydon as a temporary measure, while the rest will remain in offices in the City.

Damage suffered by the company ran into millions of pounds, he said. It was insured against bomb damage, but bore some of the risk. A police cordon between Leadenhall Street, St Mary Axe and Bevis Marks was lifted at midnight last night, but access to St Mary Axe - where the 100lb bomb went off at 9.21 on Friday evening - remains restricted.

Owen Kelly, Commissioner of the City of London Police, yesterday rejected criticism that police took too long to find the body of the third person killed by the explosion.

He said buildings were too dangerous to search.

Well, I was looking after accounts with 16 turnover up to a million, 17 myself and look after accounts that went up to 18 25 million. 20 So how did you go about pursuing that 21 desire? 22 A. I was business manager. My title might 22 have been senior business manager, and I worked for 24 Allison Lucas when I left. 25 Q. What were the nature of your customers at 24 Laughton? 24 Laughton? 25 A. A mix of different trading businesses. 3 Q. But all with annual turnover less than 3 one million pounds? 4 A. Yes. 4 A. Yes. 6 Q. And how was your mix of customers 6 different, if it was, when you moved to Islington? 4 A. I did have a number of property 5 customers, and some of the customers at Islington, 10 just by the nature of where they are located, did 11 have turnover slightly over a million. 12 Q. How many customers did you have while you were working at Islington? 13 A. Petro Torontomers 14 A. Well, I was looking after accounts with 15 Q. And how did that compare to the number 16 you had at Laughton? 17 A. It was about the same. 18 Q. And how did that compare to the number 19 Q. So how did you go about pursuing that 20 desire? 21 A. Well, I saw the job advertised, applied 22 for it, had an interview with? 23 Q. Who did you interview with? 24 A. Martin How and Ray Pask. No. Sorry, not 25 Darning Tangata. 26 Darning Tangata. 27 A. MR. BLACKMAN: That is so argumentative and it is just sort of piling argument upon argument, leaving out prior things that were testified to and we are not, you know, Mr. Werbner, we are not in front of a jury here. This is supposed to be a discovery deposition, you are supposed to be getting facts, not making speeches. So if the witness wants to hear the question again and answer it, he certainly can do so, but the question, as you well know, is completely out of bounds.

Q. I will ask the court reporter to please read the question so that we can hear the witness' answer, beginning with "So unless a customer..."

MR. BLACKMAN: Also misstates the prior testimony because he didn't in fact say any of those things, but go ahead.

(Read back)

A. It is a difficult question to answer without confusing the issue. If a customer had been convicted in a court of law of any kind of unlawful activity, then that would be grounds on which we would ask them to make alternative banking arrangements.

Q. Was there any circumstances, less than a criminal conviction, by which NatWest would stop rendering financial services to a customer that the bank had serious concerns was engaged in terror financing?

reasking argumentative questions. You can answer the question one more time if you can.

MR. WERBNER: I would ask the court reporter to please read the question pending to the witness.

(Read back)

A. I think I have already said, without looking at the record, I can't under oath say whether we had a red flag against the Interpal record on Goalkeeper. It was not a red flag against the account. We did continue to provide financial services. We had made a report to the authorities. It didn't mean that we had -- I think your words were "serious grounds", it meant that we had discharged our regulatory legal obligations to make that report.

Q. From your work on the Money Laundering Team, in the period 1999 to 2003, do you ever remember a Money Laundering Suspicion Report being submitted to the regulatory authorities when the risk was color coded less than red?

A. I couldn't say without examining all the records that were submitted to the authorities between those dates.

Q. From your work on the Money Laundering committee during the period 1999 to 2003, do you recall or can you say that every customer's account that was

A. It was a hypothetical question. Each case would be looked at on its individual merits.

- Q. From the position that you played were there circumstances that you in your role as the leader of the Money Laundering Team, less than a criminal conviction, that would cause you to recommend the bank stop providing financial services to a customer suspected of terror financing?
  - A. None that I am aware of.
- Q. Isn't it true that the bank continued to provide financial services to Interpal even when it had red flagged its account and stated in internal bank records that it was suspected of terror financing because of the bank's concern of "reputational risk"?

MR. BLACKMAN: Object to the form of the question, lacks foundation. We don't know what records you are talking about. Also, to the extent that it is based on Interpal having the account red flagged, it has been asked and answered, I think close to ten times. We can spend time reasking questions and making speeches but I have got to tell you this. We agreed to two days for this thing because in an excess of caution that you might need it, but you have spent most of the first hour making speeches, and we may just cut this off at some point if we don't move on to something other than red flagged for terror financing was disclosed and submitted to the regulatory authorities?

MR. BLACKMAN: Objection to the form of the question. Red flagging accounts is not something that I think has been identified as a concept, much less testified about. There is no Money Laundering Committee. His testimony was that he was part of an Anti-money Laundering Unit. Maybe this is just you just don't even care what the testimony has been, but I object to the form of the question. It lacks foundation. You can answer.

MR. WERBNER: Would you please read the question to the witness.

(Read back)

A. It was a Money Laundering Suspicion Reporting Team. It was not a committee of any sort. Again, without reviewing every single record I could not under oath tell you whether every single account that was red flagged was reported.

Q. Are you aware that around August 2003 the United States Government declared Interpal, the bank NatWest's customer, to be an organization engaged in terror financing?

MR. BLACKMAN: Object to the form of the question. Actually there was a specific designation
